

WELCOME TO ALASKA

Moose larger than a car, bears larger than man, and national parks larger than some U.S. states. The word “epic” doesn’t even begin to describe Alaska.

Stunning, unforgiving, and utterly huge, Alaska is a place that brings to life what Jack London termed the “call of the wild.” Yet, unlike London and the gold-rush settlers of yesterday, visitors today will have a far easier time exploring the vast wilderness.

In fact, there are few other areas in the U.S. where you can climb a mountain path that has never been stepped on before or visit a national park with fewer annual visitors than the International Space Station.

You don’t need a zoo when you can watch brown bears catching leaping salmon out of a stream or pass a majestic moose on the road side. Alaska is a land for those who want to see wilderness in its natural habitat—both flora and fauna.

For newcomers to this wild land, the real joys are in the unexpected: humongous vegetables, thanks to the extended summers, ancient Russian cemeteries, and out of the way towns that haven’t changed much in years. Welcome to the last frontier in the U.S., a state with a quirky medley of tourists, back-to-the-landers and Alaska Natives.

We will be visiting Alaska on Royal Caribbean’s Radiance of the Seas from August 30, 2019 to September 6, 2019. Our President’s Club extension will be August 27–30, 2019, at the Alyeska Resort in Girdwood, Alaska.

*Qualification runs from December 1, 2017, through May 31, 2019.
85,000 points qualifies one couple.*

Source: alaskatours.com

MORE FACTS ABOUT ALASKA:

ALASKA HOSTS

13 national wild rivers, two affiliated areas and one national heritage area

17 OF THE 20 highest peaks in the United States are located in Alaska

MORE THAN

1/2 of all national parks in the U.S. are found in Alaska

Alaska is home to

49 NATIONAL HISTORIC LANDMARKS AND
16 NATIONAL NATURAL LANDMARKS

Alaska has the

LARGEST
POPULATION OF BALD EAGLES
in the U.S.

